Requesting Photocopy from Libraries in the United Kingdom

On the 31st October 2003, the UK copyright law has been amended to comply with a European Union directive on copyright and related rights. Some 'exceptions' to copyright (library privileges and fair dealing) have been removed for any copying that is carried out for commercial purposes.

In order to qualify for exemption from copyright fee when requesting photocopy service from UK libraries, the end users must sign a Declaration Form (on the right), confirming the copy is required for private study or research that is not for a commercial purpose. Users not able to sign the declaration will be charged a copyright fee in addition to the standard charge by the lending library.

For such request, users have to complete the form with your signature and return the PRINT form to:
